Businesses breathe during flooding pause

THOMAS SMITH
Journalist

It has taken a village to defend against last week's rising floodwaters.

On Tuesday, April 14, Minden Hills declared a State of Emergency. Not too surprising for seasoned residents who weathered the most recent floods of 2013 and 2017. With continued rainy weather, the Gull River rose exponentially.

All community programming was closed as MH staff took action in the state of the emergency running the evacuation shelter at the arena. Over 20 roads throughout the county closed or had restricted access.

The Sunnybrook Bridge and Loggers Footbridge were closed on the evening of April 17. With the bridge closures, many businesses felt a decline in both foot traffic and customers.

This past week, residents and business owners alike breathed a sigh of relief when the warm weather dried up a large chunk of pooled water.

For Boshkung Brewing's owner Mathew Renda, this is the first flood that he has experienced.

Operating his business on flood plain, he had heard of the past flooding events that had affected the community.

New HHHS CAO comes home

EMILY STONEHOUSE

Editor

There's a new face leading the charge at Haliburton Highlands Health Services (HHHS), but some may recognize him from around town.

Jack Hutchison is a Haliburton County local, who grew up in Minden and graduated Haliburton Highlands Secondary School a number of years ago.

After leaving the community to attend post-secondary, Hutchison held a variety of health system leadership roles, most recently as a Chief Operating Officer, supporting a broad portfolio including corporate services, people and culture, and information management. He's also worked closely on capital redevelopment and system planning across the province, with a passion for rural healthcare on the forefront.

But when the position became available for the president and CEO of HHHS, Hutchison knew it was time to move back home. "I truly believe that in roles like this, and those of our frontline staff, that when you work in a smaller community, and if you're from there, you really are serving the community," he said. "You're not just caring for patients, you're caring for your family, friends, and neighbours, and that brings a special sense of purpose and drive."

Hutchison returned to the community with his wife, Victoria, and their two young kids earlier this year. He officially started in his role with HHHS on March 30, and has immediately hit the ground running. "I am passionate about rural and remote healthcare," he said, "breaking down barriers, increasing access, building pathways for our patients and making a positive difference for our community."

He noted that while he has big visions for the organization, he isn't starting from scratch. The role was previously held by Jennifer Burns-West as the interim president, when Veronica Nelson, who was instrumental in navigating the community outcry during the closure of the Minden ER in 2023, began work at Ross Memorial Hospital. "This organization has made great strides over the past few years, and has great momentum, so we want to build on that," said the new president.

Hutchison shared that the two former presidents laid the groundwork for the direction the organization is headed, and staff were quick to welcome his additions to the vision ahead. "I've felt very welcome here," he said, "right from day one."

In terms of looking ahead, Hutchison noted that management are nearing their end of their three-year strategic plan. "I see HHHS continuing to be a cornerstone of this community," he said, "providing high-quality, compassionate care close to home. I also see an organization that continues to grow thoughtfully, embraces innovation, and remains deeply connected to the people it serves. Most importantly, I see a team that continues to take pride in their work and in one another."

Through listening, learning, and finding ways to fill in the gaps, Hutchison is confident that he can lead the team at local sites. "Success in rural healthcare is about access, quality, and trust," he said. "It's about ensuring people can receive the care they need, close to home, delivered by teams they know and trust. It's also about the experience - how people feel when they walk through our doors, and how supported our staff feel in delivering that care."

While the province continues to navigate challenges around healthcare funding, Hutchison believes in the community that raised him, and feels dedicated to giving back. "I truly believe that your address should not dictate your access to high quality healthcare services," he said. "So (we) will be breaking down those barriers, and continuing to develop partnerships that bring access to services for our community."

Jack Hutchison has stepped into the role of president and CEO of Haliburton Highlands Health Services as of March 30. He has big visions for the future of the orgzanization. /EMILY STONEHOUSE staff

Muskoka hospitals seek financial help from County

EMILY STONEHOUSE

Editor

Healthcare is top of mind for all Ontario residents, and with the two new hospitals being built by our neighbours in Muskoka, questions have been circulating around what that may mean for local healthcare.

During a regular meeting of County council last Wednesday, representatives from Muskoka Algonquin Healthcare (MAHC) presented a delegation to local councillors. Cheryl Harrison, the president and CEO of the organization was joined by Dave Uffelmann, board chair, seeking support from local councillors for the two different sites.

"Let me be clear," opened Uffelmann, "most of the people in Haliburton County do not use our hospitals. However, a significant portion of the residents of Algonquin Highlands township do use our hospitals. In fact, most of the residents of two of the wards in that township exclusively use our hospital."

Uffelmann noted the "old and outdated" buildings they are working with, including limited or no sprinkler coverage, with an overall condition rated as 'poor'.

"Patients shouldn't have to wait for hours on a stretcher in a hallway before being admitted," said Uffelmann. "Hospitals should ideally operate at 85 per cent of capacity."

The chair noted that their hospitals are consistently over that suggested capacity. "Space limitations mean we can't expand further."

With these considerations in mind, Uffelmann noted the progress made for the two new hospitals: one in Huntsville, a new build on existing land, and one in Bracebridge, a new build on new land. "We are expecting the approval literally any day at this point." Together, the new sites will offer over 90 per cent single-patient rooms, with a total of 157 beds.

"Strong emergency departments are one of the most important services needed by your constituents," said Uffelmann.

The project comes with a price tag of $1 billion, with the provincial government offering "the better part" of the cost, said Uffelmann. But taxpayers and donors need to raise approximately a quarter of the total in order to unlock access to the provincial funds.

At this point, the District of Muskoka, comprised of six townships, has pledged $77.3 million towards the project. At least one of the townships - Georgian Bay - has no residents who use the hospital sites.

"Please help us to provide the best possible healthcare for your residents who do rely on MAHC," said Uffelmann. "People from elsewhere in Muskoka ... have asked why Algonquin Highlands isn't on the list of contributors. Similarly, a number of your residents who support MAHC through personal donations have shown surprise that their local government hasn't yet stepped up."

Deputy Warden Liz Danielsen responded to the delegation. "This is a subject as the mayor of Algonquin Highlands that I really do struggle with," she said. "It is to me a challenge for all of us, that municipalities are having to pay into systems that are the responsibility of the province. We here in Haliburton County have suffered some losses, particularly in the Minden area."

Danielsen noted that the local healthcare system does service individuals from outside the county as well. "I'm not sure what the solution is or what we can do to help. We're already overstretched in many, many ways in respect to our taxation," she said.

Councillor Jennifer Dailloux, the deputy mayor for Algonquin Highlands, shared that she and her family exclusively use the Muskoka medical sites, despite paying taxes to the Haliburton locations. "It does support a hospital system," she said. "And the ultimate provincial hope is that it does balance out in the end."

"It's an issue," said Councillor Murray Fearrey from Dysart. "I don't know how to resolve it. Certainly, we all want to help, but it's just figuring out what we can do and what we can't do." Fearrey added that many residents from Highlands East utilize services in Hastings, while other locals go to Lindsay and Peterborough for their healthcare needs.

The delegation was received as information, with Uffelmann adding that their organization would return with additional data to assist with the overall analysis of the local costs.

Minden works towards recovery

After a tense few weeks, the Township of Minden Hills took a collective deep breath as the waters that had ravaged the community began to recede late last week.

"The respite from the rain and the colder temperatures means that we are not getting additional water into the lakes to the north," said Minden Mayor Bob Carter last Wednesday. "It will probably take a week or so days to bring down lake levels. In that time, you will see water levels on the Gull River go up and down, but they will remain below flood levels."

It was noted that thanks to volunteer efforts, the community currently has an excess of sandbags, which were sent to Bracebridge, Oro-Medonte, and Ramara to support their ongoing community challenges. The plan for sandbag disposal will be launched early this week, alongside a community clean-up, to handle the remaining sandbags around Minden.

On Wednesday of last week, the township worked with an engineering firm to confirm the safety and structural integrity of the Sunnybrook Bridge that runs along Bobcaygeon Road, and the Logger's Pedestrian Bridge across the Gull River. "As most of you know by now, we were able to get successful assessments of our two bridges in Minden on Wednesday, and we were able to safely reopen the bridges," confirmed Carter. "Road crews are out examining our roads, culverts and bridges throughout the township to assess post flood damages."

Once the bridges were re-opened, the Evacuation Centre at the S.G. Nesbitt Memorial Arena was transitioned to a Warming Centre. "That means we can release the Salvation Army folks and the Ontario Corps to return to their homes and make ready for their next deployments," said Carter. "It also means that we can start to return to normal and get our usual programming up and running."

Last Monday, the Minister of Emergency Preparedness and Response, Jill Dunlop and local MPP Laurie Scott visited Minden to assess the damages of the community. "They were able to meet with many volunteers and were impressed by their spirit and hard work," noted Carter.

"Once again, thank you everybody. More formal and complete thanks will be forthcoming. For now, we complete our tasks in dealing with the flood, as we plan and execute the clean up to get Minden ready for the summer."

While the State of Emergency is ongoing at the time of press, further updates will be shared on the newspaper websites as they become available.

Climate change concerns brought to council table

EMILY STONEHOUSE

Editor

As the waters continue to recede in Minden Hills, talk of severe weather events came to the County council table last week. Julie Bromley, the manager of emergency services and healthy environments for Lakelands Public Health, joined the meeting to present on protecting health in climate change.

Between floods, extreme heat, and ice storms, the County has been putting an effort into recognizing the challenges with ongoing weather changes. "The health impacts of climate change are not often looked at," opened Bromley. "But public health has a role in drawing attention to the climate-health connection."

"When it comes to climate change, that's something that's happening now, right before our eyes," said Bromley. "We've seen intense weather events. You regularly experience the strain on local infrastructure."

Bromley shared that climate change in Haliburton County includes extreme or prolonged heat events, sudden cold, ice storms, extended power outages, wildfire smoke and poor air quality, and floods.

While climate change may seem gradual, Bromley urged that it is ongoing and present in our communities. In regards to heat and humidex, the number of days over 30 degrees Celsius each summer has steadily increased. "Heat has serious impacts to health and well being," she said, referencing a heat event in British Columbia in 2021, where over 600 individuals died from heat exposure. "Many were older adults who died in their own homes," she said.

On the flip side, the cold also continues to be a risk. "Not everyone in our communities has the same abilities or resources to cope with cold weather," said Bromley. Risks include carbon monoxide poisoning, energy poverty, and infrastructure damage.

Bromley noted that the risk is not solely on the hazard, but also the vulnerability associated with the incident. "Vulnerability increases when someone has increased exposure, sensitivity, or a reduced ability to take adaptive actions," she explained.

"The good news is that there is hope with climate adaptation," said Bromley. "Local municipalities play a central role in climate adaptation. Actions taken can all contribute to fostering social connections."

One of the key adaptation examples that Bromley provided was warming, cooling, and clean air centres. She noted that these facilities can offer an opportunity to reduce demand on emergency services during extreme temperature events, provide safety during power outages, support isolated residents, and strengthen community trust.

"Resilience is strongest when public health and municipalities move in the same direction," closed Bromley. "My conversation today isn't about starting from scratch, it's about strengthening what already exists … At the end of the day, leadership and resilience are built locally."

McFadden's stretches out

THOMAS SMITH

Journalist

Mike McFadden stands behind the meat counter at McFadden's Meat Market. He welcomed his faithful customers back to his newly renovated shop on Monday, April 20. /THOMAS SMITH staff

As you walk into McFadden's Meat Market, you are greeted by a spectacular display of any cut of meat you can think of.

For owner Mike McFadden, words cannot describe the beauty of fresh beef.

Behind the counter, a large cutting space invites you to watch the dance of preparing ingredients. Striving for the highest quality of meat and with decades of skill, McFadden has nothing to hide in how he prepares his product.

Turning left, wall to wall freezers offer selections that tickle the imagination, from kebabs to exotic meats like alligator and venison.

Living in Haliburton was a dream come true for Mike McFadden. Growing up, he would visit his grandparents' cottage every summer.

In 2000, one visit to Haliburton became a permanent stay. Soon after, he was offered a job working in a meat department and scrubbing dishes. Working in the meat room, McFadden was able to showcase his talents in grinding burger and trimming roasts.

"As the years went on, I ended up becoming meat manager," said McFadden.

Through the years, McFadden worked at the Independent and Foodland, learning more about the meat industry along his life's journey. One of his most valuable was working with Chad at West Guilford during hunting season who taught him how to break down animals properly.

"As the years went on, I decided I wanted to do it for myself," he said.

McFadden's passion and knowledge for meat brought followers who would support him anywhere he went.

Throughout his career, McFadden has learned from the best and most seasoned butchers.

"You won't be able to be the best if you can't take someone else's knowledge too," he said.

Visiting other shops he respects, one thing was apparent to him: walkability is key for customers to make the best decisions for their food.

With his seasoned advice for preparing meat, the only thing left to the customers is cooking it.

McFadden enjoys nothing more than explaining to customers how to best prepare his products. A part of his soul goes into every sale. If a customer is not satisfied, he is committed to making things right.

"How you treat your customers is what matters for any successful business," he said.

Setting his roots beside the former Beer Store on Hops Drive, McFadden found the perfect location to start his small business.

"As the years went on, we began to outgrow the space," he reflected.

Once the neighbouring space became available, McFadden was quick to jump at the opportunity to expand his store an additional 1,000 square feet.

It has taken a village to complete the renovations, which began in December of last year, and had their official re-opening just last week.

With local contractors, his wife and his team, he could not have done it without the support of the community around him.

"I really enjoy talking to people, explaining traceability, where things come from and how things can be prepared," he said.

"We have a good following, friends, family, and support," said McFadden. "It was the years of doing businesses with the Independent and Foodland that helped me be successful."

McFadden strives to not only use local talent in improving his business, but offers local nonperishable products like honey and preservatives whenever he can. With every town having their own producers, he uses his own retail space to provide more exposure for locally manufactured goods.

Beyond meat, McFadden's is the perfect stop for quality sauces, ready to eat entrees, and pickles to go with your latest culinary creations.

McFadden's Meat Market is located at 23 Hops Drive in Haliburton and open from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Tuesday to Friday and from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday.

County approved for federal funding around mental health

EMILY STONEHOUSE

Editor

"What you're seeing today is a significant achievement for the County, and also for the local municipalities," opened Haliburton County CAO Gary Dyke when introducing Michael Slatter, chief paramedic, and Sue Tiffin, the director of community outreach.

During the April 22 regular meeting of County council, Slatter and Tiffin announced that they were successful in their application for funding from Health Canada's Emergency Treatment Fund.

"Canada is facing a public health crisis that has left no community untouched," reads the staff report. "This crisis has been driven by a complex set of factors, including a dangerous, illegal synthetic drug supply. The tragic impacts are seen and felt among our friends, our families, and our neighbours."

Staff shared that they had received $1,176,390 to enhance their current outreach program, including a custom van, safety equipment, medical supplies, and staffing support and training during the fiscal year of 2026-2027. To continue the program after 2027, the County will be responsible for funding in the form of ongoing staff support and vehicle maintenance.

"I wish that we had some costs that we could offset in taking this into the future," said Councillor Bob Carter, the mayor of Minden Hills. "But the fact is, we've had this unmet need with both drugs and mental health, so I think that this is going to be money well spent, and money that needs to be spent to protect our community."

Slatter noted that the program would work in conjunction with the paramedic department. "The idea is that we'll still continue with the clinics that are run regularly throughout the county," he said. "But we'll add a mobile component … seven days a week to reach the vulnerable populations throughout the county as a whole."

Over 400 submissions were made to the federal government to access the funding, with the County of Haliburton being one of ten that were approved. "It was pretty exciting," said Slatter. "We're looking forward to developing the program."

Dream come true for newest reporter

IVY KATZ

Journalist

Hello Haliburton! I am thrilled to have found myself in my dream job as a staff reporter - with the most welcoming and talented team at the Echo, Minden Times, and County Life.

I have been coming up to Haliburton since the very beginning of my existence, although I did not live here full time. Despite being far away from retirement, I always knew I would probably retire up here one day. Well, that one day came much sooner than anticipated. This place is where my heart has always been. My father had been living up here full time for 25 years, and it was his dementia that started bringing me up for longer and extremely frequent trips since 2019. In this process, I started exploring working here, and considered relocating from Toronto, to be closer as his caregiver. This was when I started to really get to know the incredible locals who make up this very special place.

Prior to living here, I have been involved in the arts for 20 years, as a writer, event-coordinator, speaker, editor, writing coach, promotor, publisher, and more. I ran an awards-nominated art magazine that was designed to bring people to the arts and was geared towards the 55+ demographic, and was featured on Global News's The Morning Show just before the pandemic hit. In fact, most of my work has somehow always connected to the Baby Boomer population. Somehow, it is the generation I click with the most. The magazine branched out into a show I hosted and produced for two seasons, from 2018 to 2020, which focused on illustrating how the arts informs every element of our socio-political lives. The show was wrapped up on a high-point with the beginning of the COVID-19 pandemic.

I hold my BA (Honours) and am specialized in English Literature and Linguistics and German Studies was my major. I have written freelance articles and reviews on luxury destinations, cuisine, and theatre.

In 2016, I spent two months living with the Inuit while researching their housing and food situation, where I spoke in the schools on the value of education, and hunted Caribou in the remote fly-in community of Naujaat, formerly known as Repulse Bay.

In late 2021, my first full-length poetry collection launched. I am currently working on a novel. When I'm not reading or writing, you will generally find me hiking, running, or collecting firewood. I look forward to meeting more and more of you in Haliburton!

Celebrating first responders on May 1

EMILY STONEHOUSE

Editor

A proclamation was brought to the table during last Wednesday's regular meeting of County council, celebrating some unsung heroes of the community. Warden Dave Burton announced that May 1, 2026, would officially be recognized as First Responder's Day in Haliburton.

An annual day of recognition, the origins of the day date back to 2013, when the provincial government announced it would be celebrated across Ontario. On the date, extra gratitude is directed towards those who deal with emergency situations, including but not limited to police officers, firefighters, paramedics, military personnel, emergency medical technicians, dispatchers, nurses, doctors, and emergency managers.

Haliburton County is sure to celebrate the event with a number of open houses and activities across the region. On Friday, May 1 from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m., community members are invited to visit a number of first responder locations. The following locations are open to the public on May 1:

Drowning

I'LL GIVE our County councillors credit for staying calm, cool, and collected when representatives from Muskoka Algonquin Healthcare (MAHC) came with an ask for financial support last week.

With plans of building two new and improved medical sites in the neighbouring communities, representatives from the organization approached our local councillors, noting that constituents within our borders are regulars at the Muskoka sites.

Crossing boundaries for healthcare is nothing new. All of us, at some point or another, have had to leave town for appointments in Peterborough, Lindsay, or Toronto. Yes, some go to Muskoka. And I am sure others from out of town occasionally come here.

Editorial

Emily Stonehouse

But the part of the presentation that put my back up, was when the board chair of MAHC, Dave Uffelmann, said: "People from elsewhere in Muskoka ... have asked why Algonquin Highlands isn't on the list of contributors. Similarly, a number of your residents who support MAHC through personal donations have shown surprise that their local government hasn't yet stepped up."

Oof. I watched the tide of tensions change when he said that to the room of County councillors; the overall temperatures taking a sudden nosedive.

Telling our poverty-challenged community that we're not giving enough money away is like telling someone who's drowning that they're not swimming fast enough. A punch to the gut, sudden and winding.

The provincial government has promised the project 'the better part' of one billion dollars, noted Uffelmann. But in order to access that funding, the community is on the hook for raising one quarter of the need. And while that amount was not once disclosed during the financial ask to council, it roughly equates to $250,000,000.

That's not pocket change.

Councillor Liz Danielsen of Algonquin Highlands noted that Haliburton County has their own fair share of medical challenges, including the closure of the Minden ER in June of 2023. Jennifer Dailloux, the deputy mayor for Algonquin Highlands, shared that she uses the Muskoka sites, but other individuals from beyond our borders also use our sites, and there's "hope that it all evens out."

When we want to point fingers to who "hasn't stepped up", the first on the list should absolutely be the provincial government.

It was once explained to me (in very simplified terms) that the province is responsible for the buildings, while it's up to fundraisers, donors, and local tax payers to tackle anything that happens inside. This includes physician recruitment, staffing, doctor wages, equipment, mental health support, and any additional programming. While the province provides a roof and a door, the heartbeat of a hospital is brought to you by your community.

And we're just barely treading water.

MAHC's approach to pointing fingers and wondering why we're not involved in their hospital support was the wrong angle. Healthcare across the province is in a state of crisis, and if we break ties and sever bonds across boundaries, we lose momentum in our strength to make things better.

So next time fingers are waved, maybe it's better to look up the ladder to see who's making the calls, instead of drowning those just treading water.

Boys will be boys

GISÈLE PELICOT is the French woman who invited the world into the court room where she was facing down 51 men and their lawyers who were defending themselves from charges of raping her while she was drugged senseless by her husband.

Gisèle's goal in so doing was to survive the ordeal. The strength she acquired and has shared generously with women everywhere is to change the direction of the shame blame: men should be ashamed for raping rather than women being shamed for having been raped.

The question left hanging in the air is why it has taken so long and been so hard to make that shift. What lies beneath?

Pelicot's memoir, A Hymn to Life, is pre-occupied with that question. She sifts through her entire life, including the fifty years she lived with her rapist husband under the impression that theirs was a loving and fairly well-functioning relationship, to understand her sustained naivety. She unpacks her husband's life to begin to understand how he developed and lived two distinct lives, literally under her unsuspecting nose.

Even though I tend to be psychoanalytical in my perspective on humanity, the slings and arrows of their respective lives do not adequately explain, for me, the rot at the heart of their relationship. Clearly Dominique, her husband, was fatally injured by his father's cruelty and the failure of others to recognize or challenge it. Evidently (eventually it became evident), Gisèle took refuge in unfinished childhood grieving to see unconditional love, aka 'mother love', as the solution to all life's challenges. As the court case wended its four-year journey to and through the courts, she falls in love – again: absolutely she was madly in love with Dominique when they got together as very young adults – with a new man, Jean-Loup, and negotiates a more reciprocal relationship.

So maybe those childhood beginnings, Dominique relentlessly bullied by an angry father, Gisèle losing at age nine a loving mother who is replaced by a harsh and critical step-mother, begin to explain their marital relationship, where she reproduces her perception of her mother's model of motherhood and wifehood, and he is the kind and supportive father/husband she thinks her father was.

It explains Dominique's bent toward dominating women sexually – his father's marital model – but it does not explain his intent and capacity to recruit 50 identified men and maybe half again as many who could not be identified and brought to justice who thought it was a good idea to rape a comatose woman in whatever way their fantasies suggested. And the countless people, presumably men, who vicariously shared their fantasies via the videos Dominique took of the men at lust and shared generously on the internet.

It also does not explain how ten years of medical investigation of gynecological problems, memory loss, injuries to mouth and rectum, other inexplicable physical symptoms, were never hypothesized as rough sex, if not rape.

The crack in the curtain that allows us to glimpse the magnitude of the evil, and its nature, is when Gisèle unambiguously, crisply, unapologetically severs a relationship with Pascale, her work companion and confidante, her best friend, when Pascale advises Gisèle to keep an eye on Dominique because he was sexually suggestive to her. This clarity, in a relationship that accommodated Gisèle having an affair, Dominique living with another woman while he punishes her for her 'mistake', suggests that the monster behind the curtain is patriarchy. An unshakeable, maybe desperate, belief that men take care of their women, that a loving husband-father would not harm their dependent women by poaching their best friend. (Or children: the ghost of incest is everywhere in the book.) A belief so fundamental to believing how the world works that it cannot be questioned, even mildly.

It seems irresponsibly reductive to put the evils of this story at the feet of patriarchy. But I cannot find a better explanation.

What comes to my mind is the way in which 'boys will be boys' is interred (buried deep within) our culture. We say it to dilute bad behaviour, to subtract agency from activity. They know not what they do. In fact, they're just doing what there is implicit permission to do, even as the behaviour is acknowledged as 'bad'. The behaviour is bad but the person who does it cannot be held responsible.

How is that? What undermines the soundness of a mind that neutralizes responsibility for known wrongs? Patriarchy privileges maleness. It gives it special status intended to be interpreted as putting the person above the rules that apply to the lesser.

In Gisèle's case, women.

In the broader world? Women, yes. But also …???

Why does a civilized world need patriarchy? That is the question I am left with.

I'M GOING to just come out and say it. I am no longer placing all my faith in Santa Claus. To be clear: I'm not disputing he exists or has a sled and magical reindeer – I don't peddle in conspiracy theories. But I do think that maybe Santa Claus has gotten a little too corporate and no longer serves the needs of the little guy. And, by little guy, I'm referring to anyone under five-foot-four.

Before anyone writes a letter to the editor to question my intelligence (again), let me lay out my case.

First, last year, at the mall, one of Santa's "elves" prohibited me from sitting on Santa's lap and went as far as to threaten me with a large candy cane if I took one more step forward. Oh sure, they later apologized and Santa's chief elf even offered me a job, but I didn't accept it. Mostly because I knew I wouldn't get past the second interview since my elvish is terrible.

I'm almost certain I didn't make the nice list because of that incident, since I did not get the Kevlar canoe I wanted. But, after Christmas, in January, when I wrote a letter to the North Pole to ascertain my status on the naughty or nice list and find out what the appeal process looked like, they did not even have the courtesy to send a response.

That's why I made a big decision yesterday and, after some research, decided to give my support to Sinterklaas – the Dutch version of Santa, which many people say is the original Santa Claus anyhow.

Frankly, Sinterklaas makes a lot more sense going forward. First off, he lives in Spain, which if you ask me, is far more sustainable than living in the North Pole these days – what with all the effects of climate change and it being the subject of dispute between Canada, the U.S., China, and Russia.

Secondly – and here's the part that sold me – Sinterklaas delivers gifts in early December, on the night of December 4th in fact. So, if you play your cards right, you can double dip.

Also, Sinterklaas has never kissed anyone's mom in front of credible witnesses.

More importantly, when you pronounce Sinterklaas properly, you immediately sound far more European. Plus, you get to say stroopwafel, which is a bonus word that's associated with the pre-Christmas holiday. And, honestly, I am now finding any excuse to use that word in a sentence.

In any case, I switched my allegiance to Sinterklaas last night, which I formally announced to Jenn at dinner. The great part is, by this morning, I had already reaped the benefits.

You see, I did my laundry yesterday, because I was down to my last pair of clean underwear – and I put the laundered load in the dryer before I went to bed.

When I woke this morning, I started dressing so I could go downstairs and gather my laundry. But, when I opened my dresser to pull out a fresh pair of socks, pants, and tee shirt, a miracle happened. As soon as I picked up the tee shirt, attached to it, by what was hopefully static, was a pair of my underwear.

Many would just say I merely misplaced a pair of clean underwear when I put away my laundry last week. But I prefer to believe the more plausible explanation that it was an early gift from Sinterklaas.

Now, does anyone have a good recipe for stroopwafel?

Hope with wings

Tales from the great Green meadow

Lynda Shadbolt

FOR MORE than thirty years, we have been feeding the birds outside our window. What began as a simple act - scattering seed, hanging a feeder, noticing who might come - has become a quiet thread woven through the seasons of our lives. Year after year, winter after winter, they return. And this past winter, more than ever, I understood just how much their presence matters.

It was a long winter that felt both magical and unrelenting. As a caregiver, my days were full - quiet, watchful, and shaped by regular responsibility. The snow was deep, the nights were long, and the stillness sometimes felt heavy. And yet, just beyond my living room window, there was movement. There was life. There was something waiting to greet each day with me. The birds came.

Each morning, before the tea had finished steeping, I would hear them - the bright, familiar calls of chickadees, the steady tapping of woodpeckers, and, most astonishing of all, the loud, exuberant arrival of the evening grosbeaks. This past winter, there were nearly seventy of them. Seventy. Their presence was impossible to ignore. They descended in a flurry of wings and sound, filling the trees and feeders with their bold energy. They were noisy, vibrant, and gloriously alive. Their bright yellow plumage lit up the winter landscape, flashes of gold against the white snow and grey sky. And their voices - loud, insistent, almost celebratory - broke through the silence of winter as if to declare that life was not only continuing, but thriving.

It felt like a gift each time they arrived, a burst of colour and sound that shifted the tone of the entire day. It is my ritual to stop and watch them. Caregiving requires a steady kind of presence. It is rooted in love, but it can also be deeply tiring - the kind of fatigue that builds quietly when you are always attentive, always responding. There were days when my energy felt thin, when the weight of responsibility was a lot.

But the birds asked nothing of me. They simply came, and in coming, they gave. They gave colour. They gave movement. They gave joy. Watching them became my form of rest - a pause in the day where I could breathe, soften, and simply be. My husband has always been part of this rhythm. For decades now, he has faithfully filled the feeders, and last winter was no different. No matter how deep the snow or how biting the wind, he would bundle up and step outside each morning. I would watch him from the window, making his way across the deck, and feel a deep sense of gratitude. His quiet, consistent act of care made all of this possible. Because of him, the birds returned. Because of him, that joy arrived daily at our doorstep.

And they did return - again and again. The grosbeaks with their brilliance and noise, the chickadees with their fearless energy, the woodpeckers with their steady persistence. Each of them carried something I needed to see. They were resilient. They adapted. They endured the harshness of winter and still showed up fully, vividly alive. Over time, they have become more than visitors. They are companions in the season. They show up each day, no matter the weather. And in their constancy, I saw a reflection of my own life. Caregiving is, in many ways, about showing up - again and again, even when it is hard. And still, like the birds, there can be moments of song.

Even in the coldest days, they sang. By the time winter began to come to an end, I realized how much they had carried me through. For over thirty plus years, we have fed them, but last winter, it felt as though they were feeding me - offering small, steady moments of hope, joy, and renewal. In their bright colours and loud songs, I found a reminder that even in the quietest, most demanding seasons, life continues to call us forward. And sometimes, it arrives with wings.

The Haliburton Legion hosted a youth awards night last Friday, where local youth were celebrated for their posters, poems, and essays submitted for Remembrance Day. Pictured are the winners of their categories, which were celebrated at a local, zone, and district levels across the province. Congratulations to the winners. /EMILY STONEHOUSE staff

Editor's note

The teams at the Haliburton Echo and Minden Times were recognized this past weekend with the official awards ceremony for the Ontario Community Newspaper Association held in Collingwood. Thomas Smith won first place in the heritage category, Emily Stonehouse earned a second place win for best news story, and Steve Galea was celebrated as the Humour Columnist of the Year. The Haliburton Echo won first place for General Excellence in their category, and an honourable mention for the Minden Times in the same category.

Thank you to our readers, advertisers, and subscribers who continue to support our organization, contributing to one of the best newspapers in the province. We are proud of our community and our efforts, and look forward to continuing to share the stories of the Haliburton Highlands.

Public feedback wanted on the Minden crosswalk plans

The Township of Minden Hills is working with our consultant Engage Engineering and has developed a Pedestrian Crossover concept for Bobcaygeon Road in Downtown Minden.

We are seeking feedback from area businesses, residents and the community regarding the proposed concept. A webpage has been developed that provides details on the conceptual drawings along with a link to the report presented to the March 26, 2026 Council meeting. Visit www.mindenhills.ca/pedestrian.

The community is invited to review the conceptual drawings, details and to provide their questions and thoughts on this plan.

Feedback will be received until May 1, 2026 and is to be emailed to admin@mindenhills.ca. This feedback is valued and provides important information that will be used to report back to council on the public input received.

If you have any questions regarding the project, please let us know.

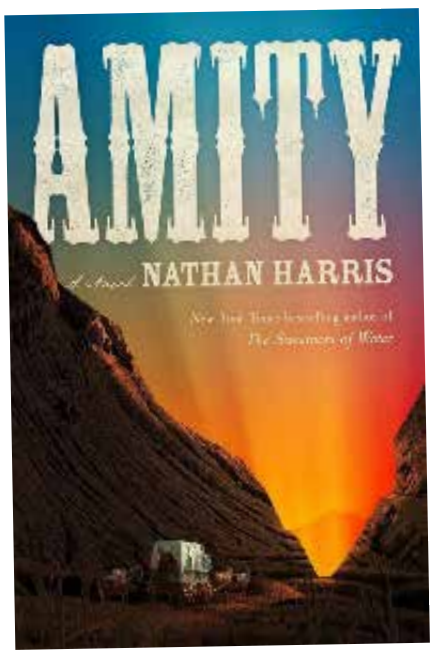
HALIBURTON COUNTY PUBLIC LIBRARY

Book of the Week



In 1866, in the aftermath of the Civil War, siblings Coleman and June are still searching for the freedom they were promised. Separated when their former master took June to Mexico, Coleman remains in Louisiana, holding on to hope - until a letter arrives, summoning him south and raising the possibility that they might finally be reunited.

But the journey is anything but simple. When disaster strikes, Coleman is forced on the run with his former master's daughter, crossing the Mexican desert in search of June while being pursued by dangerous men. As both siblings navigate peril and uncertainty, they come to understand that freedom isn't always given - it must be taken.

Poquito Loco gives it all for one more summer

Owner of Poquito Loco, Claudette Pitre, has announced that they will be closing down operations at the end of the summer. /EMILY STONEHOUSE staff

"It was a long time coming," said Claudette Pitre, the owner and operator of Poquito Loco in Haliburton. "It's not something we decided overnight."

The restaurant owner took to Facebook on April 15 announcing the closure of the popular spot in the community. "It is difficult for us to write this, but the time has come for us to say goodbye as we prepare to close at the end of summer," said Pitre. "What started as a passion project at the peak of the pandemic grew into something far more meaningful because of all of you."

Pitre shared that she will stay open until the end of summer, and then will figure out her next steps from there.

As for her reasoning for closing, the owner shared there were several factors. Between the rising cost of food, the inconsistency of the winter season, and running into issues acquiring a liquor license through the township, Pitre knew it was time to wrap it up.

Poquito Loco started during the height of the COVID-19 pandemic, with Pitre and her husband, Mark, diving into the project in 2021. "It was something Mark and I put together with the kids," she reflected. "We were sitting around, waiting for the world to open up again. It wasn't good for anyone. We had to do something."

She recalled with warmth how she and her kids, alongside their friends, spent time in the kitchen, taste testing and experimenting with the menu. The first iteration of the brick and mortar restaurant opened in June of 2021, with their current version taking shape at Castle Antiques in 2023.

Now, it's a hustling and bustling hotspot. News of the closure upset the community, with an outpouring of support and love coming in through social media. "Very sad news," reads one user. "You will be missed!" echoed another, adding to the wealth of comments and shares.

Pitre wants the community to know that they will be fully operational throughout the summer, with regular hours in practice. After Labour Day, Pitre isn't sure what comes next for her, but she knows she will be heading to Mexico. "I just love Mexico," she said. "I love the people, I love the culture, and I love the food."

More than just a cookie for Brooksong Cancer Support

IVY KATZ
Journalist

Mike Garland and Paige Chapman, the managers for the Haliburton and Minden Tim Hortons locations, pose with Maryssa Danilko and Barb Smith-Morrison at the launch of this season's cookie campaign fundraiser. /submitted

This week, running until Sunday May 3, is Tim Hortons' annual Smile Cookie Week. This year, local owners Paige Chapman and Mike Garland of both the Haliburton and Minden Tim Hortons chose Brooksong Retreat and Cancer Support Centre to be the recipient of 100 per cent of the proceeds. This is more than a noble cause, because Brooksong is community-based, yet helps hundreds of people with cancer from eight different provinces and their respective caregivers each year, while prioritizing applicants who live here in the county.

This year's partnership for the Smile Cookie Campaign is more than welcome for the registered charity Brooksong, noted executive director Barb Smith-Morrison, because they rely on donor and government support entirely for the life-enriching support they provide for patients living with cancer and their caregivers completely free of charge.

This means that those suffering from cancer, survivors, and their respective caregivers, who cannot afford a retreat which nourishes body, mind, and soul, can benefit tremendously from a top notch, private facility that offers psychosocial care, also known as "whole-person-focused care," says Morrison. "We are quite unique in how well-rounded we are," she added.

Brooksong's doors are open to everyone in the different stages of battling cancer. This includes; during-cancer care, while they are in the midst of treatment; post-Cancer care, a crucial time for anyone who has survived cancer; this is a time when patients need help rebuilding their lives. When people go through cancer, they have to process the worry that cancer may return, explains Morrison, noting that "people's work lives, friend and social circles shift during cancer, sometimes their marriages become strained;" loneliness and re-entering the world can be a real challenge.

They also provide care for those facing end-of-life, helping provide a healing experience in those final days while also providing an opportunity "to think about living and dying well," or what is known in the medical field as "a good death," noted Morrison. This benefits both the cancer patient and their families tremendously, helping to add a sense of closure and peace.

Perhaps most amazingly, Brooksong provides these services to the caregivers as well. Morrison explains that studies show that "outcome for patients is better when caregivers are also supported. Caregiver burnout statistics are significant." Caregivers are taught how to better deal with anxiety and depression. For the cancer patient, this also means they participate in the retreat with their caregiver, helping both to heal, learn, and relax, intune with each other.

As if this wasn't enough, Brooksong recognizes the large disparity within healthcare communities for Black, Indigenous People of Colour (BIPOC) individuals. Some of the challenges, such as scarring outcomes on darker skin-pigmentation and the psychological effects that go along with that, are recognized in the support given at Brooksong.

Morrison is quick to point out that in Haliburton County, we actually can "celebrate all the different 'cancer cares' that are coming, or are already here, in the county." She noted the new initiatives provided by Haliburton Highlands Health Services (HHHS), which include the new mammography unit for regular breast cancer checks; offered colorectal checks, hospice, palliative care, and "Papapalooza," for cervical cancer screening. For a community of this size, many important areas are covered closer to home. "We have a lot here for a rural community. Most of us hope for a good death. Brooksong also connects patients with death doulas here in Haliburton; these are people who accompany you and help you prepare for a good death," says Morrison.

All proceeds raised by Brooksong go to providing life-enhancing care to cancer patients, survivors, and care-givers, and paying their facilitators to lead programs, many of whom have been through Brooksong themselves. Volunteers are also a crucial part of the make-up that creates this life changing difference at Brooksong.

Brooksong recently received a Trillium grant to launch an "Alumni Program," which would facilitate care for past patients as they may need it, while continuing to build their community. "Brooksong's retreat changed my life", says one alumni patient, "for four days I was loved and cared for and it shifted my life."

This week, make sure to pop into Tim Hortons, once, twice, three times, or more and buy a Smile Cookie, knowing that you are literally saving and changing lives.

This year, "instead of public cookie decorating, a daily Tim Card giveaways will recognise engaging social media posts as a way to celebrate involvement" says the official press release.

Follow and share to see updates on cookie sales and Tim Card winners throughout the week. On Instagram tag @BrooksongCancerSupport and @TimHortons.HaliburtonCounty. On Facebook, tag: Brooksong Retreat & Cancer Centre and Tim Hortons Haliburton County.

Last year, the Haliburton and Minden locations raised over $22,000 and organisers are hoping to build on that, according to the local media release.

Other ways to support Brooksong include volunteering and one-time or monthly donations. A charitable tax receipt is available for larger donations. Enjoy your cookie and visit Brooksong.ca for more information.

Minden businesses face next steps for flood

One morning, Renda came to his business to see a wall of sandbags along Water Street. The next morning, the sandbag wall was moved to the other side of the road.

There was a noticeable reduction in patrons during the rain and flooding events. Many of his patrons were at home, defending their property against flood damage.

For Boshkung Brewing, water came into the basement and flooded out their delivery bay, forcing them to cancel some of their deliveries. St. Germaine Street beside the building had to be closed due to rising water levels,

Despite the leaks, it was business as usual for the brewery, which remained open during the State of Emergency. Striving itself to remain an available place for the community to gather, Boshkung staff assisted with sandbagging efforts and provided food and refreshments to visitors. After a long winter, the flooding was a big blow to sales.

"Thank you to everyone that put hard work in," said Renda. "We couldn't have done it without you. It was pretty amazing to see that many people give up their time"

Renda says that the outpour of community support makes him proud to operate his business in Minden.

The brewery owner remains cautiously optimistic, as he has heard that the peak of the water has yet to flow through the Gull. For now, he plans on assessing both his property and building for repairs.

Kirsten Monk and Barry Cray, of Gordon A. Monk Funeral Home took protection into their own hands after experiencing the devastating flood of 2017.

"It's not our first rodeo," said Monk in an interview with the Times.

The couple invested in a berm barrier after experiencing denials from their insurance and a lack of support from the government.

With sandbags, their berm, and a vapour barrier, Monk reports that water has been held back so far.

With no leaks, Monk reports that she has experienced "just an unbelievable amount of stress."

For the homes and businesses that have experienced damage from the flooding, Monk wishes their insurance agencies to show them kindness.

"They have a long road ahead of them and I've been down that road," said Monk.

For St. Paul's Anglican Church on Invergordon Avenue, the recent flooding forced both the thrift store and the Gathering Place to close. The church's Sunday service also had to be cancelled for the safety of the congregation, reports Rev. Canon Joan Cavanaugh-Clark.

Wardens of the church, as well as local Freemasons and Rotary members from their congregation were heavily active in sandbagging efforts and supplying food at the evacuation shelter.

Notably, the Anglican Church's Gathering Place was created in 2013 in response to the flood of that year. Acting as a place for the community to gather, use the computer, and for respite, the Gathering Place was opened in September of 2022 before being moved to the church in 2024.

In anticipation of the rising floodwaters, Rev. Cavanaugh-Clark shut off the church's furnace to protect it from water damage.

Luckily, no water was reported to have entered the building. Rev. Cavanaugh-Clark says that the church's location allows for water to crest away from the building.

One member of her congregation was not as fortunate, with the floodwaters rising up to her front steps.

Deacon Martha Waind says that she feels like the water levels were handled better this year. After the increased rainfall, she believes that the water was quick to lower.

"I am proud to be a priest in Minden," said Cavanaugh-Clark. "The community in Minden has such a sense of caring for one another."

She would like to commend Mayor Bob Carter, Deputy Mayor Lisa Schell, and Fire Chief Don Kruger for their action taken during the emergency.

After emailing Kruger, she received a response within 15 minutes and commitment of constant communication.

As of April 27, both bridges have reopened in Minden and the weather levels have lowered. With extensive damage to homes across the township, businesses expect that it may take time for residents to return to normal with repairs from the flood damage.

The Minden Times will continue to cover spring flooding as the story develops.

Furnace oil spill impacts South Lake

THOMAS SMITH

Journalist

Questions arose last Tuesday when residents were notified by Lakelands Public Health that there had been an oil spill on South Lake.

With famous oil spills like Exxon Valdez and Dawn commercials showing extensive damage to environments in the past, the extent of the furnace oil spill was uncertain.

The email from the local public health authority said that the sheen of the fuel could be seen on the lake's surface. Due to wind, the spill shifted and could not be contained.

When visiting the shore near the South Lake Trailer Park, the sheen could not be detected.

Lakelands Public Health confirmed through email that the spill originated from a private residence on the east side of the northern end of the lake.

Bernie Mayer, environmental health manager for Lakelands Public Health, says that the spill was caused by an accident. The discharge has been contained and the Ministry of the Environment, Conservation, and Parks are the leading agency managing the spill.

"MECP continues to conduct their assessment. The exact amount spilled and/or discharged is not known at this time. The sheen is floating on the surface of the water, but is moving daily depending on the direction of the wind," said Mayer.

The environmental health manager says that the oil will evaporate in the sunlight and bacteria will digest the fuel in the water.

The timeline for the oil to be processed remains entirely dependent on the weather.

"We have not been advised of any potential threat to wildlife," said Mayer.

Residents of South Lake continue to be advised to avoid drinking any water with a sheen on the surface. Residents drawing drinking water from the lake should observe the surface near their intake. If there is no sheen, public health says that it is safe to drink and to follow the water advisory.

"For anyone drawing lake water, owners are reminded to check their water disinfection/treatment systems to ensure they are functioning," said Mayer. "These water disinfection/treatment systems are designed to kill bacteria and viruses and not to remove chemicals."

Clean up of the discharge site is currently underway and the public health agency reports that all parties involved have been very cooperative.

Bottled water has been made available at Minden's fire hall for affected residents.

Please visit lakelandsph.ca/bwa for future updates or by calling Lakelands Public Health at 1-844-575-4567.

Community asked to report spring turtle sightings

THOMAS SMITH

Journalist

Many residents have been fortunate enough to spot turtles this past week. As the icons of the Highlands' warmer seasons, the turtles seem to be emerging from their brumation periods.

In the fall, as the weather cools and days become shorter, turtles stop eating and bury themselves in mud.

In the winter, many turtle species can survive for up to five months without oxygen. During this time, the only movement of the turtle is surfacing for water. Even their heart rate slows to a trickle while they rest.

Brumation is not only a survival mechanism for these ancient reptiles, but potentially a key contributor to long-term wellbeing and reproductive health.

As the winter progresses, lactic acid builds up in the turtles, causing them to venture force from their winter's rest when the temperature rises. Lactic acid is the same substance that makes your muscles sore after a good workout.

According to local turtle expert and founder of Turtle Guardians, Leora Berman, turtles need multiple days of temperatures higher than 17 degrees Celsius.

The turtles seek the warmth of basking in the sunlight to reduce the lactic acid in their system.

Recently, many readers have reported that turtles have been emerging from their ponds and basking in the sunlight.

Typically, turtles would be emerging from brumation in early May. Last year, the sightings of turtles were some of the earliest in recent years.

While this is unusual behaviour, Berman says that the exceptional amount of rainfall has led to turtles moving around more, with their preferred habitat being wetlands, they feel safe in the water to move around.

Fortunately, Berman says that the odds of a turtle becoming cold stunned is reduced. In the summer, if the temperature plummets, turtles can become hypothermic, leading to drowning. With the average temperature still being low, the difference in temperature means that turtles are still lethargic.

The increased rainfall is predicted to be a benefit for the turtles. With temperature having a huge factor on the ability of turtles to raise eggs, the increase of water means that turtles will have an easier time manoeuvring through their wetland environments.

Last year, volunteers had to assist with multiple turtles that were suffering from heat exhaustion.

Turtles are exceptionally smart creatures, says Berman. A turtle can recognize its preferred environment, identifying trees, rivers, wetlands, and even buildings where it calls home. Turtles do not cope well with being relocated to new areas. Forced relocation brings stress and is greatly disadvantaged to find food, water, and adequate nesting spots.

Some benefits that turtles bring to waterbodies include gardening the bed of the lake, spreading seeds that protect young fish fry, reduce pathogens in the water, and cycle the nutrients in the lake.

While many turtles can retract themselves within their shell for protection, snapping turtles cannot. That is why they are famous for their extending necks and biting power; it is their only way to defend themselves.

Like humans, juvenile turtles need protein to grow. When fully grown, half of a turtle's diet comes from aquatic plants. A turtle can refrain from eating for months at a time. They are also opportunistic omnivore feeders which humans should not fear when swimming.

"The best thing people can do for turtles is to learn about them," said Berman. "Turtles are intelligent, social, and emotional beings."

Berman estimates that 40 per cent of turtles have been lost in Haliburton County in the past ten years.

As one of the largest researchers of turtle populations in North America, Turtle Guardians runs entirely on support from the community while contributing vital information back to the scientific community.

To better protect turtle species, avoid hitting them if they are on the road. It is against the law to intentionally harm or disturb these endangered species. During the end of May, keep dogs away from known nesting sites.

Learn how to properly handle turtles to help them when crossing the road. Turtle sightings can be reported through their text line 705-854-2888. Calls come to the Guardians from across the world, including the United States and the Czech Republic.

Sightings in the spring help the guardians identify turtle's overwintering areas.

"We've built something really special in the Highlands," said Berman.

In the next three to five years, they hope to build the largest incubation facility and wildlife centre right in Haliburton County.

"They are Haliburton's allies," said Berman. "They are iconic and a part of our heritage."

The Turtle Guardians will be hosting an open house on May 24 and invite everyone to come and visit their location at 235 Highland Street in Haliburton.

Starting June 24, kids aged five to 12 can visit the Haliburton Library on Tuesday and Thursday mornings from 10 a.m. to 10:45 a.m. to become Turtle Guardians and learn about eight species of turtles over eight weeks.

The Turtle Guardians are in desperate need of volunteers with advanced skills. If you would like to volunteer your time in protecting local turtle populations, please visit their website turtleguaridans.com.

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

SIRCH Repair Café heads to Minden Lions Club May 24

Please note: This month's Repair Café will take place on the fourth Sunday (not the usual second Sunday) due to the May long weekend.

There's something deeply satisfying about fixing what you already have.

SIRCH's Repair Café is back for the season - a welcoming space where neighbours help neighbours repair everyday items instead of sending them to the landfill.

Location for May: special location is 166 Bobcaygeon Rd., Minden, ON

Time: 9 a.m. – 1 p.m.

Date: Sunday, May 24

Special features this month:

Representatives from the Town of Minden Hills sharing tips on landfill best practices

Barb Fawcett leading a Textile Upcycle and Recycle Workshop

Algonquin Outfitters Bike Tune Up / Repair Clinic with Dave Paddock

From small appliances to household items, our skilled volunteer fixers will do their best to bring your items back to life.

It's a simple way to:

- Save money
- Reduce waste
- Connect with others in your community

Bring something in need of repair — and discover what's possible.

For more information, or if you have questions, please reach out - we're happy to help.

Environmental Technician –Water Quality and Aquatic Plant Surveying Student Work Placement

Are you passionate about the environment and keen to make a difference at the community level?

U-Links is looking for an enthusiastic, self-directed individual to work with our community-based research and field team. Under the supervision of the U-Links Program Coordinator, you will play a pivotal role in supporting the Woodlands and Waterways EcoWatch program. We are looking to hire an individual to perform water quality monitoring and aquatic plant surveys on upper-watershed lakes in Haliburton County. The purpose of the monitoring and surveys is to collect water quality data, inventory the aquatic plants on these lakes and identify any invasive aquatic species that may be present. Training on the sampling protocols and aquatic plant identification will be provided.

The ideal candidate will:

1. Be in a post-secondary program in the field of environmental technology, environmental sciences, biology, ecosystems management or a similar field, and be returning to school in the same program in the fall.
2. Have field knowledge of water quality monitoring and/or aquatic plant monitoring or other ecological monitoring protocols.
3. Understand how to use a GPS device in the field and how to integrate collected data with GIS data.
4. Be comfortable working in a boat and around water.
5. Have reliable access to a vehicle and a valid driver's license.
6. Have strong written and oral communication skills.
7. Have strong attention to detail and critical thinking skills.
8. Have knowledge of environmental research practices, and an ability to remain cognizant of changing environmental issues related to Haliburton County.
9. Be competent with Microsoft Office applications and with social media platforms (e.g., Facebook, Twitter, Instagram).

Duration: This position is a 16-week, pending funding, beginning in May and ending before September.

Compensation: $22.50/hour + mileage + vacation pay.

Construction could start this autumn

by Andrew Milne

The hospital board is starting to look a lot like it's building hospitals.

Local residents may see the foundations in the ground as early as this fall.

On Thursday, the Haliburton Highlands Health Services (HHHS) board announced the hiring of the consultant, architect, and project manager for the capital building project to refurbish and replace hospital facilities in Minden and Haliburton.

In the same meeting the board approved the document called the 'functional plan', which lays out the timetable and other critical details of construction — that plan is now enroute to the Ministry of Health for final approval.

A project that has wended a long, tortuous route through local politics and the Queen's Park bureaucratic maze, in simpler terms, may soon be made manifest in bricks and mortar.

The board's timetable calls for a staged building process, in which the foundations are dug as early as this fall. The consultants say they can accommodate that schedule.

Consultants W.M. Salter and Associates — a firm with experience in long term care facilities, and which recently assisted in the integration of two formerly separate facilities in Parry Sound — will oversee the project, in association with architect Henry Lowry, whose experience is more in acute care. The board's project manager, Bob Savage, has previous experience working on projects with Salter and Associates.

Executive director Foster Loucks made the announcement with evident pleasure, introducing Millet Salter of Salter and Associates to the board, the public, and the media, with a small flourish.

Chair Hugh Nichol stated at the beginning of his mandate that getting the spades into the ground with all possible haste should be the board's first priority. Now that looks like it may happen this fall, and he's pleased.

Said Nichol Thursday, "I feel we're getting a lot closer. There's a lot left to do, but we're closer... I had one question for the candidates we interviewed for this position, and that's can we get this started by this fall, and Millet told us very directly he thinks it can be done."

Salter, speaking to the board Thursday, said that his firm is excited to be working on the project, and that ideally the process will evolve from here as a highly interactive one, in which the board, its employees, and the consultants work closely and constantly together, refining the plans in continual fashion.

"We aren't going to come to you with the solution, and everyone sees in a flash that that's it, that's what we're doing. That's not how it works. It's going to be a constant process, an iteractive process, where we bring something to you, you tell us what you think, we take it back, work on it, and bring it to you again, and together, we'll try to get to that best possible solution... We aren't coming in here as experts, with all the ideas, coming in from outside to tell you what you have to do... You tell us what your problems are, the way you see them, and we'll help you solve them."

Salter expressed considerable confidence in the architect. Said Salter, "Henry Lowry is in my opinion as knowledgeable of acute care as

LOOK OUT, BEHIND YOU!!

The giant inflatable gorilla featured in the Lions Club District Convention parade Saturday, appears to be lunging for several of the marchers on Minden's Main Street. In fact, a gust of wind had momentarily blown the figure over. The gorilla, an entry from the Dunsford and District Lions Club, was one of many colourful floats taking part in the parade. For more from the parade, please turn to page 3.

Community Centre could be the place to be as new century dawns

Items from the April 24 meeting of Anson, Hindon and Minden municipal council.

Turn of the century

Doug Johnson attended Thursday's meeting of council to ask about rental of the Minden community centre for New Year' Eve 1999. Johnson said he knows the Minden Fire Department has traditionally booked the centre for New Year's Eve events, but he said that if, for any reason, the fire department decided not to book the facility, he would like to have first chance.

"I'd like to see a really creative event for the turn of the century," Johnson said.

He noted that one idea would be to have a 10-hour event with one hour representing each decade of the past 100 years.

"It's something to think about," he told council.

Later in the meeting, Fire Chief Bill Hogg said that the fire department isn't likely to give up the facility.

"It's our big fund-raiser of the year," he told council.

Rescue van tender

Ridgewood Ford will supply the Minden Fire Department with a cab and chassis, which will be transformed into a rescue van. Cost of the cab and chassis will be $31,200, including taxes.

Councillor Grant Plooard noted that the tender included PST (provincial sales tax). Fire emergency vehicles are exempt from PST and although the unit won't officially be a fire emergency vehicle until the box and equipment are installed by a company specializing in that type of work, an effort will be made to see if the cab and chassis qualifies for the exemption.

Ridgewood Ford was the only local dealer to supply a tender.

It will take eight to 10 weeks to deliver the cab and chassis, which will then go to be fitted with the emergency equipment. Fire Chief Bill Hogg said he couldn't say when the finished unit will be put into service.

MAPSA can't deal with parking violators

Members of the Minden Area Police Support Association (MAPSA) have told councillor Grant Plooard, who rep-
